

The Colorado River Drought Task Force needs to act now to save Colorado's water

I urge the Colorado River Drought Task Force to improve how water is managed at the state and local levels to prevent water shortages by identifying recommendations for legislation in 2024. Inaction is not an option. Colorado cannot wait any longer and our future depends on what we do today.

Right now, persistent drought conditions and growing demands for water have put the Colorado River on the verge of a climate-caused disaster. These are the worst drought conditions that we've seen in 1,200 years, and they are showing no signs of slowing down. Decades of persistent drought and overuse of the Colorado River water supply are threatening communities across the state, we cannot become complacent.

While there are no easy solutions, we must work together to solve our water crisis because future generations are depending on us. If we do not act now, our $47 billion agriculture industry and our $19 billion outdoor recreational industry will be at risk. Future generations should be able to enjoy Palisade peaches, Rocky Ford melons, rafting and fishing the same way that we have been able to. But all of this is at risk if we do not take action now to solve our water crisis.
